Confidence

We vote to-day according to our consciences-guided by the faith we have in the men for whom we mark our ballots, and in the trust that they will-if elected —fulfil their pre-election promises. Confidence wins more votes and more friends than party affiliations or purchased preferences. Look at the cards in any of the New Surface Cars when next you ride in them, and see if there is any house there represented that does not possess the confidence of the great New York City public.

Every newcomer among the car cards is given a share of this faith, the assumption being that he is as reliable as the older advertisers.

It is a good thing to possess public confi-dence—it leads to assured and profitable prestige.

We have the exclusive control of all the advertising space in all the
